G. A. R. MONUMENT FOR THE SMALLEST POST IN COUNTRY

SOLDIERS MONUMENT

The smallest G. A. R. post in the entire United States is located in a Massachusetts town, not far from Boston.

This post-war musters only nine members. These compose the remnant of 10 men who marched forth at the call of their country, all to defend the flag and preserve the Union in '61. Ninety-one of the hundred have died, some in the war, some later.

These 'nine' are now left. This band of nine will turn out on Memorial Day to dedicate a monument to their fallen comrades.

The story of this smallest Grand Army post of the band, with account of its deeds and living members and its plans for Memorial Day, will form one of the many absorbing features of the Sunday AMERICAN.

COLLEGE ATHLETES CONTEST IN FINDS

By TED PARKER.

Pennsylvania is the favorite for the intercollegiate championships in the Stadium this afternoon, which begins at 2 o'clock sharp, while Cornell is looked upon as a close runner-up for the first place, with Yale and Michigan doubtful possibilities. With good weather there will be every reason to believe that records will be set in some events, while former best marks will be equalled in such runs as the century, the furlong, the half and the mile runs.

There is also a chance that the two-mile record, which was made at the Stadium two years ago, will go by the board and a new one be established by Cornell.

Pennsylvania is the favorite, because of the confidence men are qualified for the dual yesterday, every man of them counted upon for points. Yale captured the same number, but in the case of the blue several of her men in the sprint and in the hurdles barely have a chance to place. If they do place and in the sprint and in the hurdles barely have a chance to place. If they do place and in the sprint and in the hurdles barely have a chance to place.

Eight Point Winners.
Michigan qualified but eight men, and this number does not belittle the strength of the Wolverine. With one exception every man that placed yesterday is good for a place, with two of the men are actually positive of a place tomorrow. In addition Michigan has a couple of men in the mile and half mile who will be dangerous this afternoon.

Princeton qualified seven men, but one more than Harvard, but this means little, as the men in the mile and half mile are mostly but mediocre material, when the final show down comes, and the Tigers will be lucky to get six points today.

Harvard's men are in pretty good shape. The biggest disappointment in the team was in the mile and half mile, the only of the men who placed yesterday. This year was a disappointment in the mile and half mile, the only of the men who placed yesterday.

Well-Balanced Team.
The Quakers are depending this afternoon on the well-balanced team to capture the championship. As a whole, the team is not as strong as last year, but they are not as weak as last year, but they are not as weak as last year.

There's only one water-proofer order, guaranteed. Litholin. Can't you see it? It's the only one that's guaranteed white as new with a shiny finish. It's a real water-proofer. It's the only one that's guaranteed white as new with a shiny finish.

father by picking up points all along the line. Cornell in her struggle for the championship, was the only team not expected to take the first places in these collegiate events, such as Jones, Berkeley, Princeton, Yale, Michigan, and Harvard. Yale's strength lies in her field hurdles, and she has been the champion of this event figured as the winner of both hurdles races. While Yale's hurdler, who has been a dasher, none of them seems fast enough to beat her. Cornell's hurdler, who has been a dasher, none of them seems fast enough to beat her. Those That Are Rich Are Usually Powerful Those That Are Rich and Powerful Are Usually Selfish

Wealth, Power and Selfishness Combined Depress the Country of the Income Tax and Many Other Needed Improvements

The various States have been called upon to vote for a Constitutional amendment favoring the best and most just of all taxes—a tax on incomes above a certain amount.

The discussion has been keen in Massachusetts and is keen just now in the State of New York. And some very well paid lawyers and not a few public officials—also well paid in ADDITION TO WHAT THE PEOPLE PAY THEM—are opposed to a fair tax on wealth.

Ultimately the people will have this tax, for they will not forever consent to have the heaviest loads put on the weakest backs.

It will be a good deal of a fight, however, and it is well for the average citizen to understand the meaning of the determined opposition.

In our country the rich man is the powerful man.

There was a day long years ago when wealth did not mean power, as it does today. Physical strength or the control of soldiers gave to individuals power above wealth.

But now our big men do with dollars the work that the old-fashioned big men used to do with soldiers. The dollar is a good soldier; he does not eat or get drunk or run away. Instead of costing something for his keep, he brings in interest—other little soldiers—while he lies idle.

And when the battle opens he is there to use his organized power whether it be to put a Lorimer in the United States Senate or to tone down some court decision, or purchase outright a betrayal of the people.

Wealth and power are one. Wealth is often ignorant and nearly always selfish.

And ignominiously and selfishly it opposes the income tax—although that will prove to be for wealth the best and safest of all taxes.

The people must unite in strong expressions of conviction and determined will if they want the income tax to provide as it should for a large part of the public expenditures, taking the load of taxation from the back of the man of small means, who is taxed outrageously, directly or indirectly, on everything that his family enjoys, from the rent to the gas bill.

There is no possible argument against the justice of an income tax.

Taxes support the government, and the chief function of the government in our day is TO PROTECT PROPERTY, PROTECT MEN IN THE ENJOYMENT OF THEIR WEALTH.

It is not absolutely clear that a man should be willing to pay IN PROPORTION TO THE PROTECTION THAT HE RECEIVES!

Insurance companies protect the rich against the danger of fire. Mr. Astor, let us say, who owns fifty million dollars' worth of buildings on Manhattan Island, is protected by the insurance companies. He would not for a moment be so stupid as to refuse to pay the insurance companies IN PROPORTION TO THE AMOUNT OF WEALTH WHICH THEY PROTECT FOR HIM.

The government of the United States maintains a great navy and army, and this navy and army protect Astor's houses against bombardment by foreign fleets. Is it not apparent that Astor should pay the government from his income, just as he pays the fire insurance companies, IN PROPORTION TO THE PROTECTION THAT HE RECEIVES!

As a matter of fact, Astor pays not a dollar to the support of the United States government which protects him. He lives in London, three thousand miles away, spends or invests over there five or six millions a year, at least, which he draws from New York City, and without a murmur he pays an income tax in England which helps to build up the English Navy.

How preposterous that he should not be compelled to pay for supporting the government in this country which protects him in the peaceful possession of a fortune of more than a hundred millions!

The income tax is just—more fair and even than any other kind of taxation—it simply means that a man shall pay, in proportion to his income, to support the government that protects him in the enjoyment of that income.

Naturally incomes below a certain reasonable amount should not be taxed. And incomes that are derived from actual work, earned by professional men, business men, manufacturers, etc., should be taxed less heavily than large incomes drawn from invested funds which represent no active work.

The income tax will come, for many rich men are intelligent enough to see that it is just—and the very rich more than any others are deeply interested in justice, which means minimizing discontent.

The fight is between ignorant and selfish and powerful wealth and the somewhat sluggish mass of voters that in America have not yet apparently discovered ways of impressing their will on their public servants.

It should be remembered that the public officials who oppose the income tax, instead of supporting the people's interests, have pretty good reasons for opposing it, and that in the case of such public officials fear of the people must be made strong enough to outweigh "inducements" from the other side.

No Mystery Is Too Baffling for Him

An Unseemly Spectacle

In the whole situation at the State House concerning the question of the teachers' salaries there is much which is unseemly and which ought not to arise again.

The Legislature ought not to be called upon to interfere with the government and compensation of those rendering service to the various municipalities when there is competent municipal authority to deal with the subject.

Such interference is a violation of the wise policy of home rule for our cities and towns. It is also a violation of an important and fixed business principle, that the superior should not deal with the subordinates in any department over the head of the one in control of the department. This has been found subversive of discipline and of that authority which makes the control of the superior officer easy and effective.

The School Committee, so far as they have authority, ought to be obliged to exercise it in dealing with the question of the school teachers' salaries. If they have not and will not do justice to the school teachers, there is an obvious way to correct that situation, and it is not through the action of the Legislature.

If their failure to satisfy the ends of justice with respect to school teachers' compensation is due to lack of authority, the obvious remedy is to give them the necessary authority.

It is probable that the Governor's veto of the school teachers' bill would not have been necessary if the school teachers and the School Committee could have reached that understanding and could have preserved that respect and confidence toward each other which ought to exist.

It is very unfortunate if the conduct of the School Committee has given the teachers justifiable reason to believe that any private assurance cannot be relied upon, which the School Committee might give them concerning their salary, if an appropriation is obtained to increase it.

On the other hand, if no such assurance has been given to the school teachers, it ought to be given at once. The compensation of the elementary school teachers in Boston is far below their merits.

The preparation which these teachers must make to fit themselves for the very important task of training the minds of children; the character which they must bring to their work, and without which their education will fail to make them efficient teachers; the patience which their character must give them to exercise toward the slowly developing intelligence of the child; the ever-present refractory behavior of a few children and difficulties of discipline from the mere numbers in a schoolroom, all make the elementary teacher a high-class public servant.

Whether we look at it from the viewpoint of the importance of their work, or from the viewpoint of the special qualifications they are obliged to possess, the opinion must be the same—that their compensation is most insufficient.

Give the School Committee the money with which to increase the teachers' salaries, and then remove the School Committee if they do not heed the clear expression of public opinion on this question.

But do not let us again have the unseemly spectacle of teachers and school committee members lobbying against each other, with hired lawyers adding to the din and confusion.

Ex-Yogi

By MORTON BIRGE

I said to Friend Wife, "I'm a Yogi. I'm quite a superior sort of a chap." Says Wife, "Do tell! Have you noticed, mayhap, that 'Y' stands for Yogi and also for Yap?" You're more of a Yap than a Yogi."

I said to a cop, "I'm a Yogi. I got it by saying the sacred word 'Oom.' The cop drew away just to give himself room. Then he belted me once and I promptly yelled 'Oom!' 'Come along,' said the cop, 'You're a Yogi!'"

I said to the boss "I'm a Yogi." The boss chuckled soft and retorted, "I say. A Yogi can live on a nickel a day. So you won't object to a cut in your pay. You being a regular Yogi."

I said to myself "I'm no Yogi. It's nix on Nirvana, the 'Oom' and the rice. A Yogi may think he's exceedingly nice. However, he cuts no material ice— So never again—I'm no Yogi."

Right Off'n Main Street at Noon

That's how 50 per cent. of the horses stolen every year in New England are taken by organized horse thieves.

Sounds almost incredible. We know it; but we've got the facts before us. Names, dates, descriptions, photographs, police cards, everything!

Once a week—probably twice, for we haven't been able to hear from every corner of the six States—somebody's horse is stolen in New England, never to be seen again.

This week, a paragraph in the newspapers of Maine; next week, Rhode Island; the week after, Vermont. No sensation. Neighborhood talks about the nearest case for a week or ten days—a year, maybe—and the thieves go somewhere else.

At the request of New England horse owners we have compiled a list of these cases. The result is amazing.

We have done more. We have found out where the thieves congregate, how they work, how much they make.

The New England business in stolen horses amounts to not less than $50,000 a year, going and coming; that is, in horses stolen in New England for sale in New York and New Jersey and in horses stolen over there to be sold here.

If you own a horse, you will not be happy without a copy of the Boston Sunday AMERICAN.

Come to think it over, we are willing to strike out the first five words of the preceding paragraph.
